

The European students' union (ESU) has invited stakeholders to participate in a roundtable on employability of higher education in Brussels on 29th of May. With this event, ESU aim to include a wide range of perspectives to the starting project Student Advancement of Graduates Employability (SAGE). The aims of SAGE project are to explore the impact of European higher education reforms on how it contributes to enhancing both academic quality and relevance of education for the needs of society and labour market. On the other hand, SAGE is designed to strengthen the capacity of student representatives to take part in setting policy on European, national and regional levels on improving the employability of graduates. The project combines policy research with active engagement of stakeholders from both national and European level and aims at capacity building of ESU membership, aiming to increase understanding of European integration in higher education and thus empowering stakeholder contributions to evidence based policy making.
